Sandbelt Golf Experience

Australia, and in particular the state of Victoria is famed for its diversity, where nationalities, cultures and cuisines converge to form a rich and fascinating melting pot.

Golf has been played in Australia since 1882.

From the traditional championship courses of Melbourne's Sandbelt to the classic links layouts of the Mornington Peninsula, Victoria offers an unparalleled diversity of courses to suit all tastes.

Combine this with some of the best restaurants and finest wines south of the Equator, and you have the makings of a superb golf experience - brought to you exclusively by the Ultimate Golf Series from Cathay Pacific.

At 612-yards, the par five, fourth hole on the Open Course at Moonah Links is sheer beauty to look at but a demon to play. Three well-positioned shots are essential to avoid the bunkers and reach the safety of the green.

With over 400 courses to choose from in Victoria State alone, many of which are restricted to members and their guests, the Sandbelt Golf Experience takes you to some of the finest clubs Australia has to offer.

Melbourne's Sandbelt region boasts not only the top two courses in Australia, but also two of the top 30 in the world - Royal Melbourne and Kingston Heath. Situated on the spectacular Mornington Peninsula, Moonah Links is now the Home of Australian Golf, and is located just a short distance from the ultra exclusive National Golf Club.

Kingston Heath Golf Club

Par 72 - 6,929 yards

Often favourably compared in its layout and difficulty to Royal Melbourne, Australia's number one course, the bunkering at Kingston Heath is regarded as both beautiful and brutal due to its strategic placement.

The third hole is a classic short par four at 298 yards that initially tempts the golfer to select the driver and go for the green, however this hole is all about placement. Errant tee shots will catch the large fairway bunker, and approach shots need a well-played short iron to a small, narrow green protected by a mass of manicured bunkers.

The Metropolitan Golf Club

Par 72 - 6,939 yards

Ranked fourth in Australia, Metropolitan features wide fairways protected by dense woodlands and superbly sculptured bunkers. One of the longest courses in the Sandbelt, it requires a solid long game and an equally sound short game.

The 190-yard par three, fifth at Kingston Heath is a true test of golf. With an undulating green that falls from left to right and a multitude of bunkers to avoid, the tee shot must be struck precisely to get the best result.

At 469-yards, the par four, 15th at Metropolitan Golf Club is easily the hardest hole on the course. A well-positioned drive will give you the opportunity to reach this narrow green in two shots.

With stunning coastal topography, the Mornington Peninsula is fast becoming a Mecca for golfers who want to experience perfect links style layouts that are likened to some of the finest courses of Scotland and Ireland.

Moonah Links

Open Course: par 72 - 7,418 yards

Legends Course: par 72 - 6,906 yards

Selected as the venue for the 2003 Australian Open, Moonah Links boasts two championship courses that feature huge mounds, hidden pot bunkers, deep rough and large rolling greens.

Moonah Links is an excellent example of modern championship golf, and while the Open Course may be the longer and tougher of the two, golfers will be challenged by the ever-present wind on both layouts.

The 462-yard, par four, thirteenth on the Legends Course at Moonah Links is the hardest hole on the course.

The National Golf Club

The National 'Old' Course: par 72 - 6,904 yards

Moonah Course: par 72 - 7191 yards

Ocean Course: par 72 - 7,165 yards

The National is Australia's largest private club, comprising three very distinct and challenging championship layouts, all ranked in Australia's top 40.

Designed by Robert Trent Jones Jr, The National 'Old' Course is characterised by daunting drives and approaches to greens that require golfers to avoid dense vegetation, deep rough and large open bunkers.

Greg Norman's Moonah Course is a links-style layout that was recently rated in Australia's top 10, and would not look out of place in Scotland or Ireland due to its deep bunkers and natural coastal rough.

The par three, seventh on the Old Course at the National Golf Club is a stunning short hole over a gully of scrub, with the ocean acting as the backdrop. When the wind blows off the ocean, this course is considered by some to be the toughest in the country.

The par three, fifth hole on the Greg Norman-designed Moonah Course at the National Golf Club is one of the most difficult holes most golfers are ever likely to play.
